Take Christ, then, as your Teacher; as your confidential Friend; and you will then learn the secret of true happiness. XVIII. Proverbs xiv. 32. IF we were required in a word or two, to characterise this verse, it would be by two familiar, but expressive words: darkness -- light. In this declaration, there are all the essential elements of each involved, in the respective expressions, and experiences of the text, regarding the righteous and the wicked. Of the latter, it is said he is driven away in his wickedness, but of the former, he hath hope in his death. These are not fancy sketches, they are the actual issues of life under different aspects: divine revelation exhibits these issues, to warn the unruly, and to comfort the obedient. In the Scriptures we...
