Charles did not interfere, as he wished the Puritans to feel that Parliament would not spare them, and that their only hope lay in his indulgence. The new Parliament, therefore, which met in 1661, passed a series of persecuting statutes. I. The Act of Uniformity, 1661, required every clergyman, fellow of a college, or schoolmaster to accept everything contained in the Book of Common Prayer. Under this Act two thousand clergymen lost their livings. II. The Corporation Act, 66, compelled all persons holding office in corporate towns (where the Puritans were most numerous) to renounce the Covenant, to receive the sacrament according to the rites of the Church of England, and to declare upon oath that they considered resistance to the king wicked under any circumstances. III. The Conventicle Act, 1664, forbade, under heavy penalties, any meeting for purposes of worship attended by more than five persons not of the same family, if such worship were not in accordance with the practice of the Church of England. IV. The Five-Mile Act, 1665, forbade any clergyman who had not subscribed the Act of Uniformity or sworn to the doctrine of passive obedience to teach in school or to come within five miles of any corporate town. By these measures the Cavaliers hoped to extirpate Puritanism and to bring the whole nation once more within the circle of the Episcopal Church. But the attempt proved altogether unsuccessful. The Royalist Reaction. --This Parliament met in...
