Not illustrated. 1892 Excerpt: .I wherewith to reach The dizzy, shining height where thou hast flown, But wings of love, and they are all untaught The art of such high soaring. Blameless so, Thou needs must own, for they were trained by thee, And only from thy teaching, further given, Can ever venture the ambitious flight Thy wishes urge. Forgive me, if I seem To answer lightly. All my heart responds, And all its loyalty pays reverent heed. But for a shepherd s bride have I been schooled; To this my wishes and my hopes have led; And when, instead, there opens to my view, All unprepared--as if to twilight shade At once should come the dazzling light of noon--A place beside the greatest of earth s kings, Where I must match the glory of his state, . Must feel and do and be what it requires, Wielding the influence that touches springs Which may unlock, for realms and multitudes And countless generations that shall be, The treasury of blessings, or set free Imprisoned woes and curses--wonder not To mark the shrinking of my untried heart, Or that, for more and higher than the sake Of love or joy, whether of mine or thine, I beg a little space in which my soul, Bewildered by the suddenness and greatness Of such a change, may seek its wonted peace, And that with aid thou givest I may find The wisdom, strength and meetness that I need To do thy bidding and...
